

Discerning A Dangerous Hypothetical While Living In Harm's Way

Given the preoccupation toward building a global system, please ponder, for just a minute, this thought:

A worldwide authority/power becomes both acknowledged and sanctioned. It's tax required by all (on both individuals and groups of all types – e.g. governments, businesses, etc.) is imposed so as to, as the world leaders claim, help resolve world indebtedness. As a result, for example, it goes after the nation of the United States, demanding the 34+ trillion debt be paid. The national powers of the former USA (still a nation but now under the more broad authority of the global system) vote to default on the loan. All settled ... we are safe. Are we really? All settled ... we are free to move forward unencumbered. Are we really? All settled ... Our filing Chapter 11 relieves our obligation to pay our debt. Does it really? (Recall, this handout is only presenting a hypothetical.)

After the global power is established, after it requires loan payment and then after hearing the United States is refusing to pay the debt, it then passes this resolution: The USA's governing power is an elected one – elected by the people. As a result, it is the people (with their individual wealth) who are deemed responsible to pay the 34+ trillion debt. Because the one world system is the ruling authority, the strong resolution is then enforced. All (USA) Americans must give of their resources to pay for this debt. Concerning this “hypothetical” ... Does this sound impossible? Think again.

IF such a movement took place, what power would we, as individuals, have to ignore and/or reject it? If the USA is obligated to pay its loan in this most viable way, would we, individually, be asked to give up our worldly treasures like our businesses, property ownership, etc.? Let me cite a specific example.

My wife and I own property worth about a quarter of a million dollars. Given each American would owe almost half that amount (if individuals were required to contribute to paying the national debt), a foreign power (a global power) could then make and take its claim. They would accept (actually, take!) our property as our personal payment toward debt resolution.

Does the above sound pretty far fetched? Given the craziness of our day, is it really that unlikely that something like this could take place? It is not as crazy as it sounds. On an even more important (non-hypothetical) front:

We are in harm's way today and we need to resolve our spiritual indebtedness, one we owe to our Creator. We need to come to Him on His terms as to what it takes to restore relationship with Him (in whatever degree each of us face). That's true [even] to the one who goes by the name, “Christian.” God alone is Savior. As Savior He saves through a process: Regeneration, Justification, Sanctification and Glorification. Salvation is a process done by God. Those of us who wish to pay our spiritual debt must accept the full Counsel of His Word and express saving faith through walk in Him. IF we abide, we will be fruitful. IF we do not, we may be the sprouts of Mt. 13 which wither. IF we do not bear fruit, we may one day be cast into the fire – John 15. IF we are not fruitful to at least some degree, we could be judged to be like the one who buries the talent the Lord had given him, only to find that very talent taken and himself being thrown into outer darkness – see Mt. 25.
